

"The Last Hope." Ex-President Fillmore, in his recent letter of Sept. 28th, says: "I look upon the election of General McClellan as the last hope for the restoration of the Union, and the security of personal liberty."

Millard Fillmore is not of the Democratic party, and has never been. He was an old Whig, and his education and associations were such as to define him to affiliate with the Union party. He chooses, at this time, to cast his lot politically with those who have heretofore been in opposition to him. His reason for so doing is this: He looks upon the election of General McClellan as the last hope for the restoration of the Union, an honorable peace, and the security of personal liberty.

Such language is of more than ordinary import, coming from such a man as Millard Fillmore. He is honorably identified with the history of the Republic; is a statesman of capacity and experience; a well-versed citizen of his country, and interested in its prosperity. He has retired from public life, and looks upon the passing political struggles. He cannot be, however, as he is not, indifferent to the future of the country. With an unbiased and unprejudiced mind he tells his countrymen, that he regards the election of General McClellan as the last hope for the restoration of the Union, an honorable peace, and the security of personal liberty.

We do not know that words could be more uttered by any citizen, that would create a more profound impression upon the American people, than those of Mr. Fillmore. They were not uttered thoughtlessly, in haste, or passion, but calmly and deliberately. Having no personal or political interest beyond that of any other citizen, in the election of General McClellan, he would not have said what he has of him without the most profound conviction of its truth. His words appeal, trumpet-tongued, to the patriotism and good sense of his countrymen—to their love for the Union, to their desire for an honorable restoration of fraternal relations between the States, and to their interest in the security of personal liberty. Union and honorable peace, and the security of personal liberty will, in his opinion, be clean gone beyond hope with the re-election of Mr. Lincoln.

What a responsibility does the citizen take, who votes for the re-election of Mr. Lincoln! And how will he reproach himself shall he aid in bringing upon his country and his countrymen, the calamities Mr. Fillmore predicts will follow the re-election of the present Chief Magistrate!

What General Jackson thought of "necessity," and "battles," and "the bells," such as Seward told Lord Lyons he could ring for his own and his master's amusement, may be gathered from the following words of a distinguished man's far-seeing address to the citizens of the United States, March 24, 1837:

The legitimate authority of the government is abundantly sufficient for all the purposes for which it was created; and its powers being expressed, enumerated, there can be no justification for claiming anything beyond them. Every attempt to exercise power beyond these limits should be promptly and firmly opposed; for one example will lead to other measures still more mischievous; and if the principle of constructive powers, or supposed advantages, or temporary circumstances, shall ever be permitted to justify the assumption of a power not given by the Constitution, the government will before long be all the powers of legislation, and will have, in effect, but one constitutional government. The Constitution cannot be maintained, nor the Union preserved in opposition to the people's feeling, by the mere exertion of the coercive powers conferred to the general government; the foundations must be laid in the affections of the people, in the security it gives to life, property, character and property in every quarter of the country, and in the mutual attachment which the citizens of the several States bear to one another as members of one political family, mutually contributing to promote the happiness of each other."

A "STARTLING" DOCTRINE.—In July, 1862, President Lincoln returned to the House of Representatives the bill entitled "An act to suppress treason," with his objections to the same. In his message he declared: "It is startling to say that Congress can free a slave within a State." Subsequently he attempted to do the very thing which he said it was "startling" to say Congress had the power to do, thus placing himself above Congress, above the representative, legislative power of the people. But Mr. Lincoln has "usurped power"—oh! no. If he does it in one instance, will he not, in any other, in another?

Gen. Butler writes to Simon Cameron, endorsing Lincoln and the platform. Butler has made millions of dollars by his connection with this administration, and Cameron stands branded with a reprobation of condemnation for dishonesty and treachery, passed by a Congress in which Cameron and Butler are both fitting supporters of Old Abe, as they stand foremost among the thieves and plunderers who have grown plump with ill-gotten gain wrung from a suffering people.

Let it be remembered that Abraham Lincoln refuses to sign bills that have passed both Houses of Congress, not because they are unconstitutional, but because they interfere with his own projects. He makes the legislative Department of the Government secondary to his proclamations and edicts. Should the people elect him, he will claim that his usurpation is ratified and carry it still further.

SEPARATISM.—The friends of Lincoln have much to say about sympathizers. We know of two kinds, viz: those that sympathize with the people, and the great calamity that has befallen our nation, and the other that sympathize with Lincoln, the speculators, thieves and plunderers that have obtained possession of the Government. Democracy, we are glad to say, belongs to the former class. It is easy to determine which is the most virtuous class.
